What Is This Room For?

One room, a written purpose, and specific next actions.

A PLANNING SESSION, NOT A ROOM RESET.

Bring paper and a pen or your phone. Involve the other people who use the room before agreeing on changes. The finish is a written plan; the physical work happens in separate sessions.

ONE ROOM. NOT THE HOUSE.

Do this for a single room, finish it, and stop. You can run it again next week for the next one — but a house-wide audit in one sitting is how this ends up half-done in a notebook you never open again.

1 Pick the room

Not the worst one. The one you're in most. Effort spent on a room you use daily pays back daily; the spare room can wait another year, as it has been doing.

2 What's its job?

Pick one. Rooms can do two things, but only one of them wins when they disagree — and deciding which now is the entire point of this exercise.

- [ ] Sleeping
  Name any other uses that need space too.
- [ ] Cooking and eating
- [ ] Sitting with other people
  Talking, eating, watching something together.
- [ ] Sitting on your own
  Reading, watching, recovering.
- [ ] Working or studying
- [ ] Getting in and out
  Keys, shoes, coat, mail, bag.
- [ ] Storing things
  A real answer. A room that's honestly storage beats one pretending to be a study.

SAY IT OUT LOUD

"This room is for ___." Most people have never once said what a room in their home is for, which is exactly why it drifted into being for everything.

3 What's fighting it?

Tick what's true in this room. These six cover almost everything — they're the failure modes, not a list of chores.

- [ ] Something in here has no home.
  It gets moved, never put away, because there's nowhere to put it away to. Usually it's most of the clutter.
- [ ] Furniture is doing a job it wasn't meant for.
  The coffee table is storage. The dining table is a desk. The chair is a laundry pile.
- [ ] You clear it before you can use it.
  If using the room requires a 15-minute cleanup every single time, the room is broken.
- [ ] There's a pile nobody owns.
  It's been there weeks. Nobody put it there and nobody will move it.
- [ ] One light, in the ceiling.
  Try the actual activity under the lighting you normally use; note any difficulty.
- [ ] The room has two jobs and they're losing to each other.
  Work and rest in the same space is the common one. Neither happens properly.

4 Next actions, with a date

Choose the next concrete action for the problems you identified. Use up to three rows; leave unused rows blank. Name the action, a time, and who has agreed to do it. Keep disagreements as open questions.

WHAT I'M GOING TO DO	DONE BY	OWNER / SUPPORT

> MAKE SUPPORT OPTIONAL AND AGREED
>
> Name the person doing the job. If you want a check-in, ask someone willing to help; a phone reminder also works. A reminder supports starting but does not complete the action.
